Market Review

- The Philippine Stock Exchange Index (PSEI) succumbed to geopolitical risk, dropping below 6,000 in March. The conflict in Iran caused risk-off sentiment that led to a 10% drop. The PSEI is now in negative territory year to date.
- Inflation concerns quickly surged as oil prices shot up to over $100/bbl. The Philippines has historically been negatively affected by higher oil prices. Inflation was 2.4% in February, with March data expected to show an even larger increase.
- The Peso also reached a new historic low as it broke past P60:$1. Currency weakness coincided with foreign fund outflows, which helped push the PSEI lower. The Peso was 5.1% weaker in March.
- Full year 2025 earnings, which were largely in line with expectations. Yields were higher in March with the BSP holding an off-cycle policy meeting where they elected to keep rates steady.
- The PSEI has now fallen below 6,000 with support at 5,800. resistance is at 6,200. The US Iran conflict remains the main driver of the market moving forward.
